

Town council and WWN join forces in local economy support initiative

THIS week, Wellington Town Council and the Wellington Weekly News continue their joint initiative to stand by local businesses and charities during the lockdown ordered by the Government.

This page is being offered by the council and the newspaper as free advertising space to help them survive the coronavirus emergency and start to recover afterwards.

It is available to local businesses and charities forced by the Government's emergency measures to close or change their way of trading.

The aim is to help affected local businesses and charities reach out to the community served by the council and the newspaper, and tell readers about products and services which remain available and how to access them. Wellington's Mayor Cllr Janet Lloyd said: "The big-ticket initiatives such as the jobs furlough scheme are being delivered by Government, of course.

"But on a more local level we as a town council are also doing whatever we can to support our town's economy and ensure that we come out of this emergency with as many shops and businesses as possible still able to open their doors again.

"Our councillors individually have stepped up to the plate to help and I know many of them have been out there as volunteers helping to protect the elderly and vulnerable members of our community.

"We have made finance available for the Food Bank because we appreciate there are going to be huge demands on it to help families who might otherwise struggle.

"We have hand-delivered to thousands of homes throughout Wellington a leaflet pulling together as many as possible of the phone numbers, email addresses and websites to which residents can turn if they need help.

"This initiative with the Wellington Weekly is another way in which we feel we can help our community pull through these unprecedented times.

"We will review the initiative and we will also continue to look at any and all ideas that come to us for supporting the town we serve."

Gundenham Dairy want to thank all their customers old and new for their patience and support over the last three weeks, we have really appreciated the kind words and cards we have received. We are pleased to be part of the community and we want to help as many people as we can but currently we have hundreds of people looking to become customers, we are working through those lists prioritising the vulnerable where we can. The easiest way to contact us is by email or by leaving a message on our answer phone and we will get back to you as soon as we can.
