

Town council and WWN join forces in local economy support initiative

THIS is the third week of a joint initiative by Wellington Town Council and the Wellington Weekly News to help local businesses and charities affected by the coronavirus emergency.

The free advertising on this page is being offered by the council and the newspaper with the aim of helping businesses and organisations to keep in touch with their local community.

Wellington's Mayor, Cllr Janet Lloyd, said: "I am immensely proud of how our community is pulling together during this crisis – the many volunteers who are supporting vulnerable residents with shopping and other chores, the public service workers who are continuing to work collecting recycling bins, driving buses and taxis, delivering our post, the NHS staff to whom many owe their lives, the local authority staff who are co-ordinating delivery of vital services.

"All have shown tremendous dedication and determination to help us get through this crisis and come out the other end.

"Tragedy has touched our town council as it has for many families across the Deane but councillors continue to look to do what we can to help, and this initiative with the Wellington Weekly will hopefully help our economy to bounce back once the crisis is ended."

Cllr Lloyd also issued a reminder for local businesses to apply for any Government grants for which they might be eligible.

"I believe fewer than half of businesses locally have so far applied, so I do not want anybody to miss out on funding which may help them to survive the pandemic," she said.
